True Friends

True Friends

In the quiet corners of the heart,
Where shadows linger, where dreams start,
True friends dwell, a constant flame,
A bond unspoken, yet never tame.
They hold you steady when winds are strong,
A melody played when the world feels wrong.
Through darkest days or skies of blue,
They walk beside, always true.
Not bound by time, nor by the years,
They wipe your doubts, they calm your fears.
In laughter loud or in silence deep,
They are the secrets you long to keep.
With every step, they share your weight,
In every choice, they seal your fate.
Their love, a lighthouse on a stormy night,
Guiding your soul with gentle light.
True friends are echoes in the wind,
The quiet strength that never ends.
Through all the changes life may send,
In them, you find your journey's end.
So when the road is rough and long,
And the world feels cold, so hard, so strong?
Reach for your friends, and you'll soon find,
That with them, you're never far behind.
